

Losing Time

Last night rain tumbled and ticked down metal drain pipes making us restive in our beds glancing the clock numberless times not certain when we slept.
Today is glaringly
clear, yet, it feels like the virus continues to pound on the door.
Meanwhile, nature pushes up its pinks, purples, golds and infant whitenesses
as if all were well.

As a poet Ray Greenblatt has also written book reviews for the Dylan Thomas Society, the John Updike Society, and the Graham Greene Society.

~ ♦❁♦ ~

The Pangolin Review, Covid-19 Issue (April, 2020)